

I would like to ask if Mental Health has been said to be a priority, why then is the budget for implementing the Bamford Review so inadequate? This review recommended change that would ONLY bring our mental health service up to the same standard as in the rest of the UK. It seems foolish to have spent 5 years working on the review and then take so long to put the recommendations in place, (which will take over 30 years at this rate) by which time the rest of the UK will have progressed even further forward than Northern Ireland. A society is judged by their treatment of their most vulnerable citizens. What image is that giving to the world of own local politicians?
